Modern isn't always bad and old isn't always good.
NERO DOCTRINE combine the best of the old school scandinavic Melo-Death with modern aggressive Thrash and adds proggy elements and set pieces.
Somewhere between In Flames, Dew-Scented, Lamb of God, Arch Enemy and Ghost Brigade lies the point of interest of the five pommeranian.
"II - Interitus" is mutifaceted, melodic, doomy and destructive at the same time and more encapsulated than meets the eye.
The lyrics, the meaning of the band name and the albumtitle are forming a unit and generate an atmosphere of nihilism and cynicism which cannot suit the Zeitgeist better.

Everything points on the depravity of mankind. Started with war traumas, abuse of power and ignorance over to religious aberrations and the marks they leave, all in interaction with the unspoken self-evidence and acceptance of this attributes in modern society.
"Interitus" (lat. devastation, ruin or downfall) delineates in it's simplicity as word the status quo in the world we live in and pushes the elapsing time of mankind and the process of the self-deinstallation into the focus.
"And then the stones began to speak. To tell the stories of ou fallen empires." Mankind delivers the flammable matter,
NERO DOCTRINE the soundtrack.
