

"You're so stuck, you don't even know"

becomes a manifesto of the four dudes of BONEZ in 2011 and this idea has become a hard-working band today, for which the dream gig takes place in a pub with 100 sweaty people, half of whom think BONEZ sucks, the decidedly worse opening band has already drunk the entire backstage beer empty, the lights are unbearably hot, the record needle is constantly slipping, the monitors are definitely too quiet and during the last songs somehow 95 of 100 people jump to the ceiling to crash the place.

Without hypes in their sights and definitely without Twitter account, the listeners are captivated with heart and soul, hard, groovy sound, aggressive vocals and critical lyrics. BONEZ is not a one-hit wonder and will not record a musically mature unplugged album in the next three years. Despite parallels to the genre masters, BONEZ stands for its own identity and character with an uncompromising sound.
