Cydonia from Freiburg are back with their second album, "Second Sight", presenting multi-layered progressive rock across eight new tracks totalling 60 minutes. Following their highly acclaimed debut album "Stations" from 2022, the band have raised their game significantly, whilst remaining true to their own musical style.

Thematically, the album explores experiences and emotions, bitterness and gloom, hope and happiness. Yet behind all this lies a significant question:
Are things really as they seem?
What if there were a second glance, from a new perspective, from a parallel world?
What if there was no promise of return?
Would we dare to take that step?

For the production and mix, Cydonia enlisted a proven expert on the German progressive rock scene this time round: Jens Lueck (Single Celled Organism, Syrinx Call, Vlyes, Sylvan) agreed to produce the album together with the band. This creative and highly constructive collaboration lends the album a new sonic depth and takes Cydonia's sound to yet another level.

The band's history dates back to 2007. Through various lineups, Cydonia developed their musical style until, in 2019, the current line-up came together to realise their vision of sophisticated yet melodic progressive rock. Their following debut album, 'Stations', was very well received both nationally and internationally within the prog scene, paving the way for their future path.

With "Second Sight", the band is now consistently taking the next step. Two long tracks and six further songs combine multi-faceted arrangements, atmospheric passages and progressive structures to create a varied album that is certainly worth more than a second look.

'Second Sight' was released on 9 October 2026 by Timezone Records as a digipak including a 16-page booklet.
